

My project is a house for socialites designed to encourage human connection through interconnected space. Inspired by House in Sakuradai by Go Hasegawa, the project explores how architectural elements can be read as both cores and walls depending on the drawing or point of view. Using thickened walls, openings, and overlapping spaces, the house creates connections between rooms that encourage movement, visibility, and interaction throughout the home while still keeping more private spaces away from the social center.

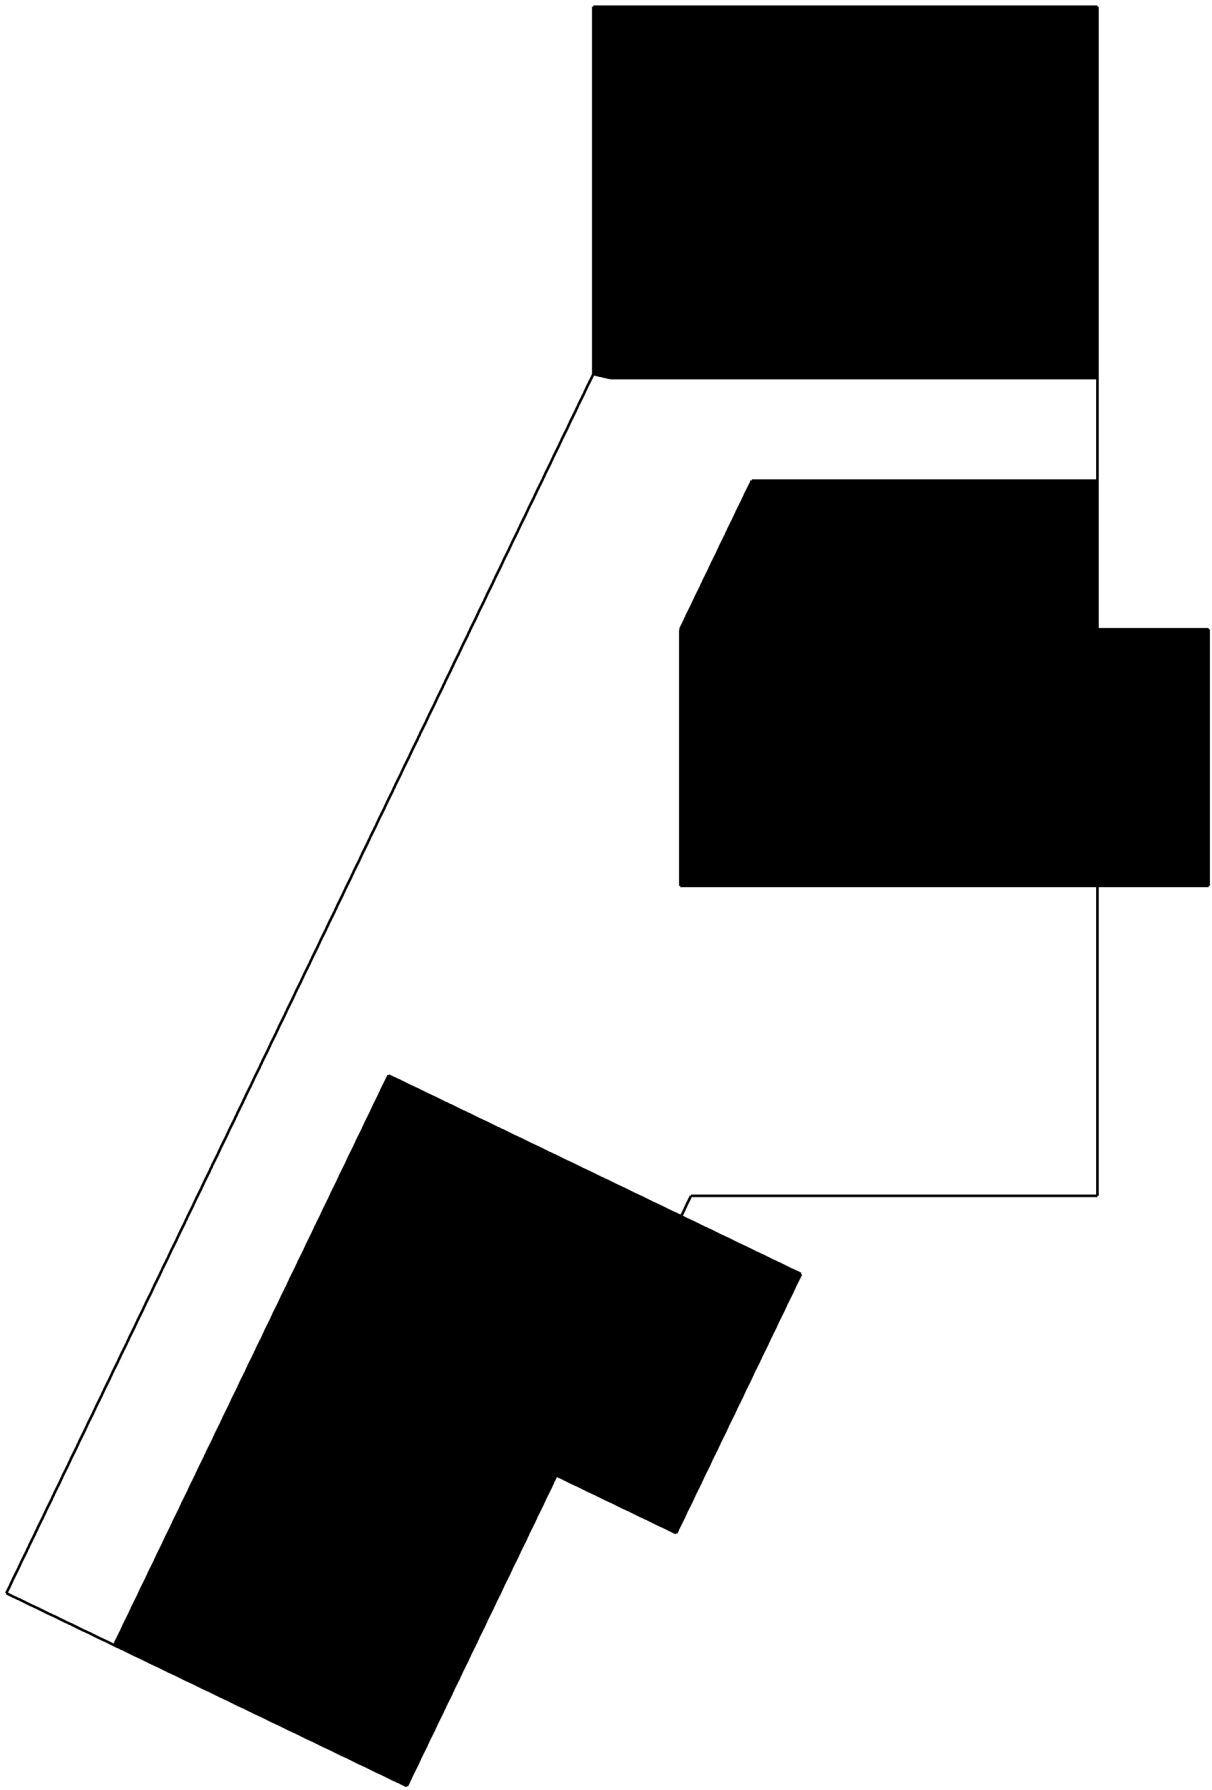

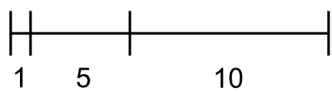

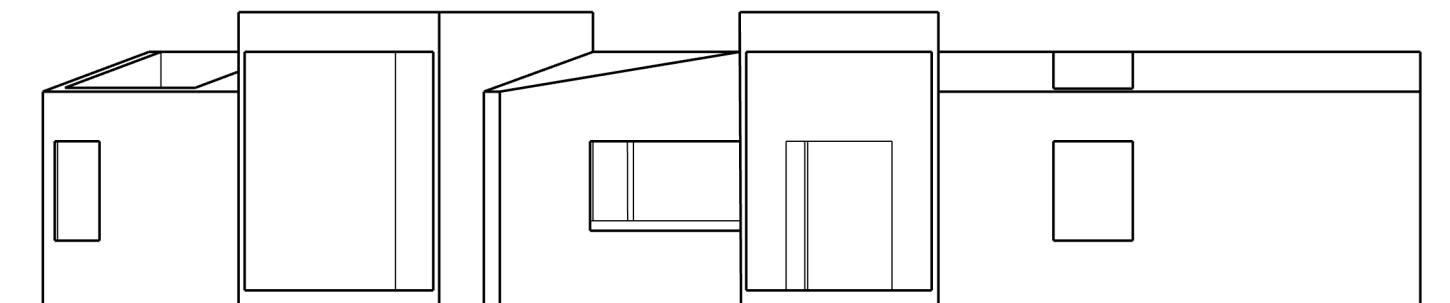

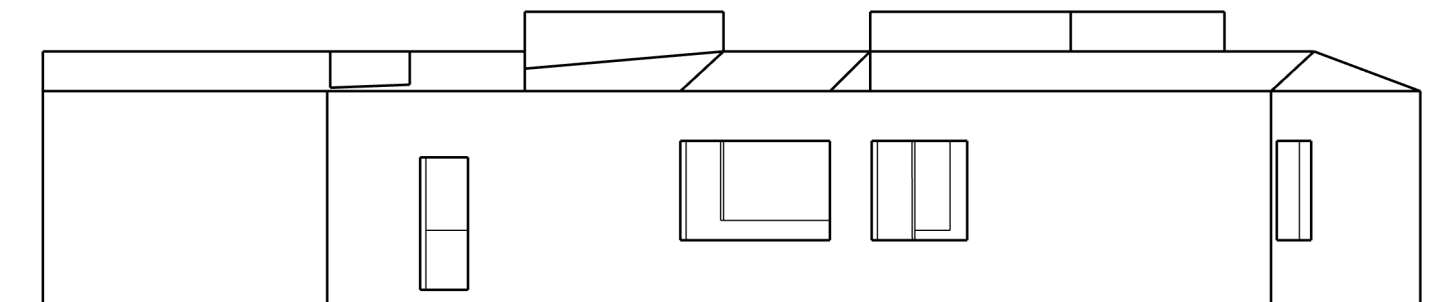

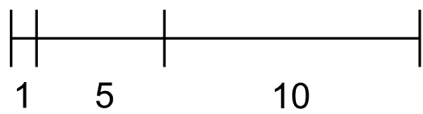

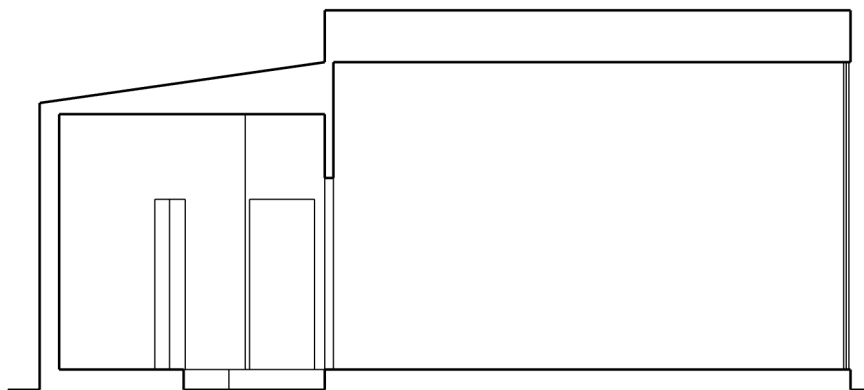

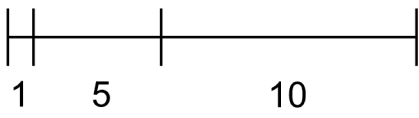

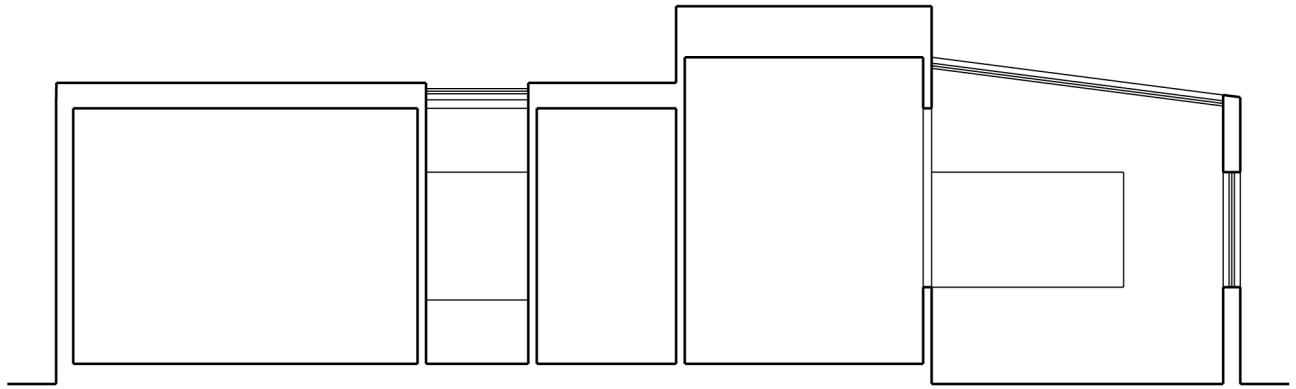

SECTION A

SECTION B

